

Fire Makes Much Ice Water.
The plant of the Thomas A. Lee Co. Company at Fair Lawn, N. J., was destroyed by fire last night. Ten ice houses, and the wagons therein, were burned. All the horses were saved. It is thought the fire was started by a tramp, who hung away a match after lighting his pipe.

LIKE RAT IN A TRAP, BOARDER MEETS DEATH

Caught Under Falling Grating and Is Hanged by Neck Until Dead.

Vincent Peninaca, employed by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, literally met death like a rat in a trap this morning. He had forgotten his night key to his boarding house at No. 419 Park Avenue, Brooklyn. So when he returned home he lifted the heavy iron grating fitted in the sidewalk near the house. Below was a sheer drop to the basement floor. The grating weighed 100 pounds. Peninaca propped up the grating by rolling an empty barrel under its edge. Then he crawled down intending to knock the barrel away after he got below. But the barrel slipped away. The edge of the grating struck Peninaca on the back of the neck. His body swung beneath. Nelson H. Harrington of No. 510 Fifty-seventh Street and Butler Griffiths of No. 431 Clermont Avenue, Brooklyn, almost stumbled over the dead man's head sticking out of the sidewalk a few minutes later.

THE AMERICAN MOTHER OF TO-DAY

By Marguerite Mooers Marshall.

Does the American mother of to-day spoil her child? Does she over-indulge him, either through laziness, carelessness or an exaggerated fear lest he may not "develop in perfect freedom," as one of the phrases of modern child-cant has it?

Liberty is a glorious feast, but I suppose one may overeat of it, as of other and more prosaic forms of nourishment. And I do think the child of to-day suffers from undigested liberty. He has more of it than his system can take care of, more than he can properly assimilate, and his disposition suffers; just as his small stomach suffers when he is overloaded with rich food. Suppose we compare a child to a garden—it's been done before, but never mind. There are three things which you can do with a garden. You can trim it, prune it, pump it, shave it, tie it up with bows of blue ribbon and the result is a formal, sedate, utterly unimaginative patch of cultivation. At the opposite extreme is the go-as-you-please garden, which is never weeded nor watered nor thinned out, in which choice plants are spindling, their blossoms sparse and pale, while burdocks and witch-grass grow lush.

But the nicest sort of garden is neither regulated within an inch of its life nor allowed to develop into a tangled wilderness. The nicest garden is full of delightful flowers, sweet peas, lilies-of-the-valley, red roses, poppies, daffodils, pansies, lilacs and ferns, which grow in a comradely fashion and in the places where they are happiest. The lilies-of-the-valley are in a shady corner, the sweet peas have comfortable brush supports and the lilacs are not too near the rest, because they have such hungry roots. The egotistical and selfish weeds are kept out, but the flowers themselves branch and bloom as Nature tells them.

WEEDS GROW FASTER THAN FLOWERS TRUE OF CHILD LIFE.

May not a child be treated like that garden? It isn't necessary to return to the days when children were repressed and frightened and punished, as a matter of routine; the era symbolized by that familiar command, "Find out what Tommie's doing and tell him to stop." On the other hand, why should the weeds in a child's nature be allowed the same "freedom to develop" which is permitted to the flowers? A sensible gardener knows better than that, for it is both a physical and a psychological fact that weeds grow faster than flowers.

How do Evening World mothers believe that children should be brought up? Would they return to the rigid discipline of the "spare the rod and spoil the child" days? Do they consider corporal punishment is still a necessity? Do they think that the boys and girls of to-day are running wild, are indeed little go-as-you-please gardens? Several mothers tell of their ideas of child-training in the letters published below, and I hope to hear from many more of you.

TEACHES UNSELFISH LOVE; WILL SPANK IF NECESSARY.

Dear Madam: I would like to give my opinion in regard to the bringing up of children to which your question in The Evening World alludes. "Now, I have two loving children. They are very much devoted to me and love each other dearly. Of course they are naughty at times. I don't expect them to be angels, but believe in keeping them in their place and not allowing them to monopolize their parents' time, rest and money. "Children need love, unselfish love. That will teach them to give love. At the same time, I believe in being firm, yes, strict with them when the occasion requires; and I would not hesitate to give them a good sound spanking. Then they shouldn't be allowed to answer back their elders, as a good many American children do. Some parents seem to think their children smart when they do this. But it has always disgusted me, and I have seen the same children treat their parents, later on, in the same way that the latter had allowed others to be treated.

"You can't be too strict with children, but it takes a mother or teacher or some one who understands human nature to bring out the best in a child. Some parents are too indulgent with their children. Everything the children want the parents try to get, even if they have to sacrifice themselves. Besides, they take the part of the children when the latter are in the wrong, and put them before every one.

Now this attitude, when carried to the extreme, is nothing but selfish love on the part of the parents, for they wouldn't act in such a fashion for any other but their own. And the result is that the children turn out to be selfish. They should be taught to be satisfied with what they have and make the most of it, but, nevertheless, to take advantage of every opportunity that comes their way. I have seen children brought up with too much indulgence, and I know the consequences are far from desirable. Of course such cases may be few and far between. What do you think about it?

"In my opinion it is only unselfish love that will bring perpetual happiness. And every mother wants her child to be happy.

AMERICAN-BORN MOTHER. SHE CAN PROVE AMERICAN-BORN MOTHERS ARE BEST.

"Dear Madam: I wish to say that I call things by their right names when I say that the man who signs himself 'Indignant Father' is a liar. The American born mother is not a dead failure, as he says, but she is the best mother in the whole world. I had the grandest mother in the world, and she was American born, and so was her mother before her. My mother raised sixteen children, and we were not raised on bottled milk either, but she nursed every one of us. I also have raised a family and did not resort to artificial feeding for my babies; neither does my daughter. The American born mother is far from being weak.

"Again, it is not true that the American born mother is not honored by her sons and daughters and that she is not worthy of honor. It is not the American born mother who is the biggest modern mistake, as the idiotic father would have you New York people believe. If you want to see American born mothers who are loved and honored by their sons and daughters come to Michigan, where there are plenty of the American-born mothers and fathers too. You will find all the beautiful, healthy children you wish to see, and their mothers are American born, and the youngsters are not disobedient and saucy.

"The American-born mothers are anything but idle. If you don't believe it come and see me. I am an American-born mother and very proud of same. MRS. A. G. MOTHERED TWO FAMILIES, ONE HER OWN.

"Dear Madam: No! I don't think all of the American-born mothers have failed. Why? Because I am one of the many who have not, and just to prove it I will state the following facts:

"When I was thirteen years old my mother died. Just to show you that I had been brought up properly, let me say that I turned right around and left school and played the role of mother to my three younger brothers, nine years, six years, and seventeen months old respectively. It is now twelve years since, and you will have to go many blocks before you find better boys.

"Now I never knew what it was to be out after 5 P. M. until I was sixteen years old, and then my 'evenings out' were spent at night school. I never had an idea of playing truant, because at the end of the term I had to show a certificate. Well, that was on for three winters, and in the mean time if I did go to any amusement it was with my father. I have never used paint or lipstick, my face in any way or kept late hours.

"This is the result: I was married at nineteen years of age. My first boy weighed eleven and a half pounds when he was born, and I nursed him. I love my children, and my second boy is now one year old. When he was born he weighed eleven and a quarter pounds, and I nursed him, too.

"I still believe in the old-fashioned way of bringing up children. They must be made to respect and love their parents, and when there is company children must be seen and not heard. When I was young my 'evenings out' were spent at night school. I never had an idea of playing truant, because at the end of the term I had to show a certificate. Well, that was on for three winters, and in the mean time if I did go to any amusement it was with my father. I have never used paint or lipstick, my face in any way or kept late hours.

Charlotte, the European ice skater, who is seventeen, objects to the use of her picture in trade advertisements, and has asked permission to bring a suit in the Supreme Court against Allen Nugent, publisher of a trade magazine, and H. Samuels & Sons, manufacturers of woolen goods.

Charlotte signs her application with the name of Olechlagel, which, she says, she doesn't use. Well, that because no one would remember it. She asked that her father, Wilhelm, be named her guardian ad litem. She was done Saturday, and he will bring the suit.

He has been found out. Some coffee concerns have tried to rid him of caffeine, a powerful habit-forming drug, but without full success and in so doing have partially destroyed his only redeeming feature, pleasant taste.

The point is—can you afford to risk health and happiness for a few cups of coffee? The wise thing is to quit coffee and use

How to Save Money Buying Toilet Paper

Never buy toilet paper unless you know how many sheets there are in a roll. It doesn't matter how big the rolls look or how many rolls you can get for a quarter.

Toilet paper can be loosely wound to make a big looking roll or the paper may be coarse and thick so that you really get little paper. You can't be deceived on quantity if the wrapper guarantees the number of sheets in the roll.
